“ Jack loved being involved, and we loved it - he was the mayor of the neighborhood. At one time, he was mowing 11 yards a week, and that wasn't very long ago. He was a sweet, sweet man and so good to us.

In whatever alternate universe he's in now, he probably already has at least five yards lined up to mow.

We loved him.

“ Jack was the patriarch of our little family on Aitken Avenue. He came to have coffee on weekend mornings, shared the news of the week, and participated in our little jokes around the neighborhood. He took us under his wing when we moved here and helped us manage becoming homeowners. We included him in everything and did nothing without his input. He was as dear to us as any family, and all our friends and family enjoyed coming up to Hudson to see him. He's known far and wide in our circle, from New York City to Nashville and Arkansas, and to San Diego and even as far as India.

When we drive up from the city, we don't say "we're going to Hudson, we say 'Let's go see Uncle Jack!'"

We'll still keep saying that.

“ So very sorry. He was so kind and a good neighbor to my mother. Please know I am thinking and praying for you all.
